Market Update

Australian and New Zealand equities fell sharply in March, weighed down by the conflict in the Middle East, with the ASX 200 and NZX 50 dropping 7% and 6% for the month.

Small caps lagged the broader sell-off, with the ASX Small Ordinaries down 11% and NZX SmallCap off 7% for the quarter.

Australian sector performance diverged. Energy surged 38% on higher oil prices, while Utilities and Consumer Staples each gained 10%. In contrast, IT declined 28%, extending its downturn.

South Korea led despite a sharp March pullback, finishing Q1 up 23%. Thailand and Taiwan also gained, while Indonesia and India underperformed, falling 18% and 14% respectively (local currency).

U.S. equities faced a volatile Q1, pressured by tariff uncertainty, AI concerns, and stress in private credit. Middle East tensions in March reignited stagflation fears and dampened rate cut expectations. A late-quarter rebound helped, but the S&P 500 still fell 4%, its weakest quarter since Q3 2022.

Mid- and small-caps declined during the March sell-off but ended Q1 higher, with the MidCap 400 up 3% and the SmallCap 600 up 4%.

Energy led sector returns, rising 38% on higher oil prices and standing alone as the only sector to gain in March. In contrast, Technology, Communication Services, Consumer Discretionary and Financials posted notable losses.

European equities fell sharply in March, with the Europe 350 down 9%, erasing earlier gains for the year. Surging energy prices, driven by the Strait of Hormuz disruption, weighed heavily on most sectors. Real Estate dropped 17%, while Energy surged 22%.

RBA minutes highlight rising inflation risks from Middle East supply shocks, tighter financial conditions, and a divided Board ultimately lifting rates to 4.10% amid persistent excess demand and uncertainty.

U.S. inflation concerns remained elevated into March, keeping bond yields higher (10-year at ~4.31%) as resilient economic data and geopolitical uncertainty led markets to expect the Fed to hold rates, with only a modest rise in rate-cut expectations.

Commodities were volatile, with oil surging on supply disruptions, while gold fell in March but stayed positive for the quarter.

Markets are likely to remain volatile near term, with inflation, central bank policy, and geopolitical developments driving direction. Positioning favours a cautious, selective approach with resilience in defensive and energy-linked assets.
